

Sustainability 2011-2021: Local, regional, and global implications

Michael M. Crow

President, Arizona State University

Under the leadership of President Michael Crow, Arizona State University has undertaken a strategic course to become a leader in sustainability education, research, and operations. In his presentation, President Crow will offer an overview of the sustainability challenges and opportunities facing ASU, as well as the broader, complex issues that stand to impact our local, regional, and global communities.

President Crow is a founding signatory and founding co-chair of the American College and University Presidents' Climate Commitment, an organization of nearly 700 education leaders who are committed to exercising leadership in their university communities and beyond to address climate change and advance models for achieving climate neutrality.
