Insights on Linking Forests, Trees, and People

from the Air, on the Ground, and in the Lab

ELINOR OSTROM

Governing natural resources sustainably is a continuing struggle, and major debates occur over what types of policy “interventions” best protect forests. Ostrom synthesizes the findings from a long-term, interdisciplinary, multiscale, international research program that analyzes the institutional factors affecting forest management. This program analyzes satellite images, conducts socioecological measurements on the ground, and tests the impact of structural variables on human decisions in experimental labs. Results support a new research frontier and move the debate beyond the boundaries of protected areas into larger landscapes where government, community, and co-managed protected areas are embedded.

ELINOR OSTROM is Arthur F. Bentley Professor of Political Science and co-director of the Workshop in Political Theory and Policy Analysis, Indiana University. She is also founding director of the Center for the Study of Institutional Diversity and Professor at the School of Human Evolution and Social Change, ASU. She is a member of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, the National Academy of Sciences, and the American Philosophical Society, and a recipient of the Frank E. Seidman Prize in Political Economy, the Johan Skytte Prize in Political Science, the Atlas Economic Research Foundation's Lifetime Achievement Award, and the John J. Carty Award for the Advancement of Science. She has authored or co-authored many books, including: Governing the Commons (1990); Rules, Games, and Common-Pool Resources (1994); Local Commons and Global Interdependence: Heterogeneity and Co-operation in Two Domains (1995); Trust and Reciprocity: Interdisciplinary Lessons from Experimental Research (2003); The Commons in the New Millennium: Challenges and Adaptations (2003); The Samaritan's Dilemma: The Political Economy of Development Aid (2005); and Understanding Institutional Diversity (2005).
